Andy Spain is an anomaly in the universe of singer/songwriters, with a unique voice and message that deserves it's own genre.

By exploring the human experience through technological imagery, Andy has developed a style he calls Sci-Folk, merging folkways with futurism into something relevant for the modern age. His songs and melodies turn new listeners into devoted fans, and lodge themselves deeply into your brain so you find yourself humming and thinking about them the next day.

Coming off high-profile performances at BAAM! Fest 2010 and Birmingham Artwalk, as well as the recent release of his debut album, Love In The Age Of Circuitry, Andy is causing a stir in his local scene. He is becoming known for his solid songwriting, passionate performances and DIY spirit.

Andy performs mainly on acoustic guitar and vocal, with occasional outbursts of harmonica, synth and distortion, crafting shows that are at once electrifying and intimate. His earnest demeanor engages fans, drawing them into his unique subject matter.

Love In The Age Of Circuitry, the debut album from singer/songwriter Andy Spain, explores humanity's place in an increasingly synthetic world. Through songs about robots, heartbreak and modern life, Andy crafts a singular style that melds past and future, folk and the avant garde.

Andy is busy promoting his new album through live performances, local press and social media. He was the featured artist on the December 2010 episode of WBHM 90.3 FM's Tapestry, as well as the December 2010 issue of Birmingham Magazine.
